

ECHO 1972

The Braintree area was first settled in 1625 by those pioneers who came from Braintree, England. In 1708, Braintree separated into these three precincts: North, South, and Middle. Then, in 1727, the southern precinct further separated into two more precincts. In 1792, the northern precinct was incorporated as the town of Randolph. The section now known as Holbrook was then called East Randolph.

Early in the nineteenth century, eighty (80) inhabitants of East Randolph, having already acquired land for a church, petitioned the state to become incorporated as a separate parish from Randolph. The reason for this was that the churches and meeting houses in Randolph were too far away. The residents of Randolph and Braintree objected, saying, "We are now threatened with a new Baptist meeting house . . . which is calculated . . . to cut off and decoy away another numerous and respectable branch of our society." Despite this, however, on February 15, 1818, East Randolph was incorporated as a separate parish, called the East Parish.

The movement for separation consisted of the residents of East Randolph complaining about the distance to the meeting house, and the difficulty of attending town meetings. A meeting was held in East Randolph on December 5, 1871. "It is the sense of this meeting that that portion of Randolph lying east of the Old Colony Railroad, should be set off from the old town and incorporated as a new town." A formal petition was later successfully circulated for this separation, and Mr. E. N. Holbrook, the town's wealthiest citizen, offered as his gift to the new town (if it were incorporated) fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00).

A battle of petitions started as the citizens of East Randolph and Randolph began to favor or oppose the split. A hearing was held in the General Court on January 24, 1872. The arguments for the separation, that East Randolph had become a self-sufficient community and that the wide valley with the railway running through was a natural division, were presented. They wanted better schools and roads, and they wanted to lower the tax rate from two percent (2%) to one percent (1%). Out of more than three hundred towns, East Randolph rated 139th in population and 172nd in taxable valuation. The arguments against the split, that the only reason for the separation was that the Randolph communities had grown around the area of what is now called Main Street, and those of East Randolph, around what is presently Franklin Street, were offered as purposeless. This distance, 1.75 miles, could be easily traveled. Figures on roads and schools were also offered as proof against the need of a separate community.

Then, on February 8, 1872, the bill was passed to the Senate, despite lobbying and a six-hour debate. On February 24, 1872, this bill was passed and Holbrook was incorporated as a new town, and the charter was signed by Governor Washburn on February 29, 1872.

Holbrook received four (4) school houses, two (2) fire houses, all completely furnished, and owed Randolph $14,988.94. A town meeting was held to decide the division of the available funds, to make by-laws, and to appoint the town officials. Mr. Lemuel Whitcombe was elected as the town moderator. Very shortly after this initial meeting, the town hall was erected. On August 12, 1874, a library was built, but on Christmas, 1877, a fire, believed to have been deliberately set, gutted the town hall and the library to such an extent that, "... only one-twelfth (1/12) the number of our collection of twenty-seven hundred (2,700) volumes escaped the insatiable monster's wrath."

In 1879, a formal fire department was formed. A police force was initiated in the following year. Until that time, Holbrook had had no need for a police force, but with the addition of nine (9) "rum-shops" and the influx of tramps from the railway, Holbrook citizens could no longer be their own guardians.

As a result of a petition, it was ruled in 1885 that Braintree, Holbrook, and Randolph would supply themselves with water from The Great Pond. Subsequently, a number of mill owners sued the towns for $121,000.00 for using the water, but were awarded only $8,000.00.

Because of rising government costs, property values, and population, the tax rate rose to two percent (2%). The period of greatest industrial growth, mostly in shoes and leather, took place during the years 1875-1885, in which thirty-eight (38) new places of business were established. Holbrook ranked 74th in manufacturing in the state, yet only 148th in population. At this time it greatly exceeded Randolph's manufacturing production. Holbrook, however, ranked last in agriculture. After 1885 the shoe industry moved to the Brockton area, and in 1910, it was reported that, "Brockton, Whitman, Rockland, Bridgewater, and Middleboro are forging ahead, while Holbrook is falling to the rear." The reason for this was that Holbrook lacked any good means of transportation, so serious efforts were made to revive business. In 1891, the Brockton and Braintree electrical streetcar systems ran through Holbrook. A "bicycle railway" and a canal were proposed also, as possible solutions to the transportation problem; however, they were never followed through.

In 1894, land was acquired along with twenty-five hundred dollars ($2500.00) from Mr. Holbrook for two parks, and in 1909, a monument to those who had died in the Civil War was erected.

The town was now having trouble with its school system because of the rise in costs of education and the growing population, despite the addition of eight (8) more schools to the already existing four (4) buildings. In 1902, enrollment developed to the extent that there averaged one teacher per school. This situation was eventually rectified through the increasing interest of its citizenry.

Since 1922, Holbrook's industry, which was at that time comparable to that of Brockton's, has grown considerably. Also at that time, considerable time and attention were given to the health and sanitation department, the highway department, the school system, and particularly to the fire and police departments. The form of the Town Government and its procedure of governing the town through the election of selectmen and a town meeting moderator, along with other elected officials, has remained in existence since the incorporation of Holbrook. The only difference is in its voting procedure when Brookville was designated as a second precinct.

DEDICATION

In this, Holbrook's centennial year, a very special time, it is only fitting that we should seek out the one person who has exemplified the best qualities that each of us would wish for ourselves. We feel that we have been successful in finding that person who has dedicated her time and talent so unselfishly to all of us. She has shared her knowledge and her life wholeheartedly with her students and colleagues alike. In her many years as an educator, she has been a true teacher and a complete human being. Always willing to listen and to extend her guidance to those around her, she has been a beacon of strength to all who know her.

Because of her selfless and uncompromised devotion to generations of Holbrook High School students and to the ideals of Education, we, the members of the Echo staff and the Class of 1972, with admiration and sincerest gratitude, proudly dedicate the 1972 Echo to a truly wonderful and outstanding individual: Miss Elna Knutson.

A MESSAGE FROM OUR PRINCIPAL

MR. WILLIAM T. BUCKLEY
Principal

It seems like only yesterday that the class of 1972 entered Holbrook High School for the first time. Now, four years later, you stand ready to graduate. We hope that during those four years we have given to you a firm base on which to build. Build on it, never stop learning, develop your potential to the utmost. Remember, whatever you do, do well. What you do is important because you are doing it. The problems of this world are not going to be solved by one great act by one individual, but rather by small actions performed well by all the people.

I extend my personal congratulations to the Class of 1972 and join with the faculty in wishing you every success.

IN MEMORIAM

MICHAEL PATRICK CORRIGAN

It is only proper that at this time we take a moment to remember Mike. Although he is no longer with us, his presence is and will be felt by all. The time which we were fortunate enough to share with Mike was short, but the impact that he had on us during these years will remain with us always.

Each one of us will remember Mike in a different way. We cannot forget his friendly smile, his warm personality or his outstanding ability. These qualities have left their mark on us. Whether Mike was best known to us as a friend, a teammate or an acquaintance, we should be grateful that he touched our lives—for it was certainly our gain.

ECHOING 1972

Beat 'em
Bust 'em
That's our Custom

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness,
it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity,
it was the season of Light, it was the season of the Darkness,
It was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair,
we had everything before us . . .

Only a moment: a moment of strength,
of romance, of glamour—of youth! . . .
A flick of sunshine upon a strange shore,
the time to remember, the time for a sigh,
and—goodbye!— . . . —Goodbye . . . !

The Braintree area was first settled in 1625 by those pioneers who came from Braintree, England. In 1708, Braintree separated into these three precincts: North, South, and Middle. Then, in 1727, the southern precinct further separated into two more precincts. In 1792, the northern precinct was incorporated as the town of Randolph. The section now known as Holbrook was then called East Randolph.

Early in the nineteenth century, eighty (80) inhabitants of East Randolph, having already acquired land for a church, petitioned the state to become incorporated as a separate parish from Randolph. The reason for this was that the churches and meeting houses in Randolph were too far away. The residents of Randolph and Braintree objected, saying, "We are now threatened with a new Baptist meeting house . . . which is calculated . . . to cut off and decoy away another numerous and respectable branch of our society." Despite this, however, on February 15, 1818, East Randolph was incorporated as a separate parish, called the East Parish.

The movement for separation consisted of the residents of East Randolph complaining about the distance to the meeting house, and the difficulty of attending town meetings. A meeting was held in East Randolph on December 5, 1871. "It is the sense of this meeting that that portion of Randolph lying east of the Old Colony Railroad, should be set off from the old town and incorporated as a new town." A formal petition was later successfully circulated for this separation, and Mr. E. N. Holbrook, the town's wealthiest citizen, offered as his gift to the new town (if it were incorporated) fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00).

A battle of petitions started as the citizens of East Randolph and Randolph began to favor or oppose the split. A hearing was held in the General Court on January 24, 1872. The arguments for the separation, that East Randolph had become a self-sufficient community and that the wide valley with the railway running through was a natural division, were presented. They wanted better schools and roads, and they wanted to lower the tax rate from two percent (2%) to one percent (1%). Out of more than three hundred towns, East Randolph rated 139th in population and 172nd in taxable valuation. The arguments against the split, that the only reason for the separation was that the Randolph communities had grown around the area of what is now called Main Street, and those of East Randolph, around what is presently Franklin Street, were offered as purposeless. This distance, 1.75 miles, could be easily traveled. Figures on roads and schools were also offered as proof against the need of a separate community.

Then, on February 8, 1872, the bill was passed to the Senate, despite lobbying and a six-hour debate. On February 24, 1872, this bill was passed and Holbrook was incorporated as a new town, and the charter was signed by Governor Washburn on February 29, 1872.

Holbrook received four (4) school houses, two (2) fire houses, all completely furnished, and owed Randolph $14,988.94. A town meeting was held to decide the division of the available funds, to

make by-laws, and to appoint the town officials. Mr. Lemuel Whitcombe was elected as the town moderator. Very shortly after this initial meeting, the town hall was erected. On August 12, 1874, a library was built, but on Christmas, 1877, a fire, believed to have been deliberately set, gutted the town hall and the library to such an extent that, "... only one-twelfth (1/12) the number of our collection of twenty-seven hundred (2,700) volumes escaped the insatiable monster's wrath."

In 1879, a formal fire department was formed. A police force was initiated in the following year. Until that time, Holbrook had had no need for a police force, but with the addition of nine (9) "rum-shops" and the influx of tramps from the railway, Holbrook citizens could no longer be their own guardians.

As a result of a petition, it was ruled in 1885 that Braintree, Holbrook, and Randolph would supply themselves with water from The Great Pond. Subsequently, a number of mill owners sued the towns for $121,000.00 for using the water, but were awarded only $8,000.00.

Because of rising government costs, property values, and population, the tax rate rose to two percent (2%). The period of greatest industrial growth, mostly in shoes and leather, took place during the years 1875-1885, in which thirty-eight (38) new places of business were established. Holbrook ranked 74th in manufacturing in the state, yet only 148th in population. At this time it greatly exceeded Randolph's manufacturing production. Holbrook, however, ranked last in agriculture. After 1885 the shoe industry moved to the Brockton area, and in 1910, it was reported that, "Brockton, Whitman, Rockland, Bridgewater, and Middleboro are forging ahead, while Holbrook is falling to the rear." The reason for this was that Holbrook lacked any good means of transportation, so serious efforts were made to revive business. In 1891, the Brockton and Braintree electrical streetcar systems ran through Holbrook. A "bicycle railway" and a canal were proposed also, as possible solutions to the transportation problem; however, they were never followed through.

In 1894, land was acquired along with twenty-five hundred dollars ($2500.00) from Mr. Holbrook for two parks, and in 1909, a monument to those who had died in the Civil War was erected.

The town was now having trouble with its school system because of the rise in costs of education and the growing population, despite the addition of eight (8) more schools to the already existing four (4) buildings. In 1902, enrollment developed to the extent that there averaged one teacher per school. This situation was eventually rectified through the increasing interest of its citizenry.

Since 1922, Holbrook's industry, which was at that time comparable to that of Brockton's, has grown considerably. Also at that time, considerable time and attention were given to the health and sanitation department, the highway department, the school system, and particularly to the fire and police departments. The form of the Town Government and its procedure of governing the town through the election of selectmen and a town meeting moderator, along with other elected officials, has remained in existence since the incorporation of Holbrook. The only difference is in its voting procedure when Brookville was designated as a second precinct.
